

Guatemala celebrating the International Red Cross day focussing on climate change, May 2008

More than a thousand children of 23 elementary schools dressed up as nurses and medics for the International Red Cross day in Chiquimula. They participated in a march and carried balloons and texts regarding the work of the Red Cross, just like last year. A climate change competition was held and the participants tried to win the first price by having the most decorated cars asking attention for climate change. Photos by Carlo Ortega, Guatemala Red Cross.

